Blackest Night #8

by Bill-E

DC's take on an intergalactic zombie uprising concluded this past week in Blackest Night #8. Geoff Johns puts the icing on the cake and wraps this event up quite nicely. Ivan Reis delivers some of this best work in this issue with multiple page spreads and beautiful details for a plethora of colorful characters [pun intended]. One of my only problems with this issue is that Sinestro's destiny to reclaim the "Greatest Lantern" title never really came to fruition. His hold on the White Light was over and done with seemingly fast. The strengths of this issue far outweigh any small complaints. As stated before the art is magnificent (especially the centerfold). The direction and clarity of the issue were well done and Guy gets the best one liner in the issue. What I'm most excited about were the story threads that Johns leaves us with at the end of the issue. These stories will obviously be unfolded throughout Brightest Day.

I feel issue eight may not have been the strongest issue of the series, but it gets a deserving 8.9 out of 10. The event overall (minus tie-ins) I'm stamping down a 9.7 out of 10.
