Darwyn Cooke brings to us his second installment of the famous Parker novels. After the lengthier Hunter adaptation, Cooke brings to us a smaller condensed version of The Man with the Getaway Face. In it we find page after page of just sheer brilliance. Cooke's ability to adapt Parker from the books to the comic medium is outstanding. He does this by adding his touch to how Parker thinks and narrates. Every page starts with the watch with the time and date; showing the meticulous nature that is Parker. The narration by Parker gives the reader the feel that you are in his mind and his violent world. Cooke, who is recognized by his 1950's imagery, is masterful at condensing such a long book into 32 pages. Stay tuned for The Outfit; Cooke's next Parker adaptation coming out this fall. 9.7 out of 10.
